

If you're playing hardball, you need PaineWebber Research on your team

It's spring and baseball is in the air. Which teams will make it to the World Series six months hence is anyone's guess.

Fortunately, you don't have to guess at which stocks could be pennant contenders and which could wind up in the cellar. Our latest quarterly Stock Selections report will help you eliminate the guesswork. And in today's market, selectivity is crucial.

The report is published by PaineWebber's research team, which was chosen among the top tier of 36 major Wall Street firms rated by Institutional Investor magazine in 1986. In fact, the magazine chose a higher percentage of analysts from PaineWebber for its 1986 All-Star Team than it did from virtually any other retail brokerage firm, evaluating each analyst's ability to estimate earnings, pick stocks, write reports and provide comprehensive service.

Stocks deemed "attractive" in the PaineWebber Research Stock Selections have outshone the Standard & Poor's 500 for each of the last three years. And as you may know, the S&P 500 index hasn't fared so badly over the same period, either...

(performance table)

Of course, past performance is no guarantee of future success, but it does give you a ballpark idea of both the success we've known and the success of which we're capable.
